TOMORROW: Tweed New-Haven Airport to Hold Public Meeting on Local Traffic

WHAT: This Thursday, officials from Tweed-New Haven Airport and airport operator Avports will host a public forum to share information about plans for improvements related to enhancing traffic flow and safety around the existing West Terminal as the airport prepares to undertake updates to the current facility. Members of the public will have the opportunity to hear from airport leadership and representatives from Sam Schwartz -- a nationally-recognized traffic engineering firm responsible for the traffic study -- and ask questions directly.

The traffic calming measures are part of larger plans announced in May to move the airport forward to the benefit of flyers, taxpayers, and the local economy. When completed, the more than $100 million project will result in the creation of a new, carbon neutral terminal, allow for more flights to more destinations, and eliminate the need for existing state and city subsidies, which currently total $1.8 million per year.

The upcoming public forum is just one of numerous opportunities the public will have to ask questions and share their ideas relating to the project.

WHO: Forum participants will include Sean Scanlon, Executive Director of Tweed New-Haven Airport, leadership from Avports, the airport's operator of more than 20 years, and members of the New HVN project team in charge of traffic changes at the airport.
